THE JUDICIAL ARRANGEMENTS. OUR readers will remember a paragraph, which a few days back appeared in the Herald, announcing that Mr. PLUNKETT was to be offered the Judgeship, vacant by the death of the late CHIEF JUSTICE,-that the death of the late CHIEF JUSTICE,—that in the event of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S fearful genius amongst felons, would office thus becoming vacant, it was to be tendered to Mr. THERRY,—that the pre-suppose, that we are intending to make ourselves disagreeable to any body. We feel too much of the laughing philosopher about us for that. All we would convey to the reader is this, that in New South Wales it seems to be considered by the colony from a score of military officers being ordered off to India, their quarters being supplied with an equal from some other place. This, however, if any one is so simple as to believe it, is a grievous mistake. With all possible de-ference for His Excellency's well-known contemptuous opinion of the whole legal profession, it has ever appeared to us that in one respect at any rate, not to speak at is greatly superior to the noble one which HIS EXCELLENCY himself adorns. profession of the law is one which almost necessity generates in its followers, a considerable degree, disciplined habits of mind, and precision and accuracy in the expression of thought. These qualities, valuable in the advocate, are required in a still higher degree in the Judge. But they are acquirable only -if acquirable at all-by practice in the discharge of judicial duties. therefore, an efficient Judge is unneces-sarily removed from the Bench, in order public interests always suffer. One soldier can draw a sword as well as another, involved in that business; and therefore a free and unchecked circulation of soldiers round the face of the habitable globe, occasions no evi! to the public at large. But to put one barrister on a bench for a year, displaced, and another barrister lifted up into the vacant seat, is only mischievously subjecting the public to a succession of judicial apprenticeships. If this colony were a seminary for Judges, and the sole object were the cultivation of the judicial character, people might perhaps contend that there was good sense in removing Mr. A BECKETT, when a year's experience had ripened him into a ready application of his powers to his new position. There might then be equally good sense, in

He did not believe that although he is an unlikely be the amount of drunkenness had been decreased believe, that although he is an unlikely subject to die of an oppression of modesty on the brain, he will still allow himself to be restrained by that, or some other equally wholesome quality, from taking a seat on the Sydney bench. Rather than regard at all for the public interests.

But in asserting this, let not the reader suppose, that we are intending to make suppose, that we are intended to deleve, that although he is an unlikely by the high duties.

He will, therefore, probably ponder well before he commits himself to the cares, anxieties, and unintermitted toils of

DR. UDNEY.

Dr. NICHOLSON orsented a petition from Dr. Udney, setting forth that he had been engagel in England for four years in procuring emigrants for this colony, and had rejected as many as ten thousand in the course of one month, on the ground of their not being suitable persons for the labour market of this colony, that, besides these and other exertions to procure suitable labourers for this colony, he had published a pamphlet upon the subject, and had circulated forty thousand copies of it, and that he had done all this without any adequate remuneration. He, therefore, DR. UDNEY. any adequate remuneration. He, therefore, prayed that the Council would address the prayed that the Council would address the Governor, with the view of having a proper sum placed upon the estimates for his remuneration, in the same manner as was done by other colonies towards their agents, particularly as it was essentially necessary that the colony should have an agent for this purpose. In moving that this petition be read, the honorable member remarked, that he believed the statements contained in it to be warranted by facts, and that the petitioner, who had been engaged as an agent for Mr. Marshall in the procuring of emigrants, had greatly benefitted the colony by his exertions.

The petition having been read,
Dr. NICHOLSON moved that it might be received.

Dr. LANG stated, that Mr. R. Cooper wished to explain some portion of the evidence he had given, as to the comparative expense of distilling from sugar and grain, as he feared he had misled the Committee.

Mr. Cooper said, he wished to explain only that there were three sorts of grain; barley at 18, 6d. con at 18, 9d., and Cape barley at 18 6d.—59 bushels corn or maize, 30 bushels barley malt, and then a quantity of Cape barley, were the proportions; and this brought the cost to about 2s. 2d., which made it cheaper to work from grain, than sugar at £20 a ton.

By Mr. BLAND: The wholesale price for spirits, thirty years ago, was 35s. a gallon; say, sar. BLAND: The wholesale price for spirits, thirty years ago, was 35a. a gallon; and sometimes as high as 40s. The retail price was 5s. the half-pint; all were drunkards, every one at that time; a sober man could not be seen.

every one at that time; a sober man could not be seen.

By the COLONIAL SECRETARY: The whole cost of a gallon of proof spirits, from the three sorts of grain mixed, of which he had spoken of, would be on an average 3s. 6d. He was now selling spirits about 28 O. P., at 14s. a gallon, This spirit was made from sugar, not from grain.

The next witness called was the Rev. Mr.

In each winess called was the Rev. Mr. Saunders

Examined by Mr. COWPER: He had been residing eleven years in Sydney; he had been Secretary of the Temperance Society for some years. He thought that lowering the duties would increase drunkenness; lowering the price would increase facilities to obtain spirits, and where there had been a decrease in price there had been increased consumption France, Sweden, Scotland, Ireland, and England; the price being lowered, the man who now did not drink spirits on account of the price would drink spirits, and the man who drank spirits now would drink more; and the measure would be the more hazardous as wages were rising, and it had been found in England that on a turn of prosperity there was a greater consumption of spirits. [The witness handed in a report of evidence taken before a Committee of the House of Commons on the same subject, together with a table annexed.] He thought people were influenced by the price; if people had not more than 10s. to spend, he would not get so much while spirits were high, as if they were low; he thought the habits of the people had decidedly improved within the last twelve years throughout all classes of society; he thought so much as to account for a large reduction in the amount of consumption of spirits. One gentleman had told him that the reduction in expenditure in his house was £50 a-year, and he was a moderate drinker; he should wish the duties on spirits to be as high as possible, and those on tea and sugar as low as possible; he did not come to the conclusion that low duties would put down illicit distillation; every man that chose might distill for himself; he would suggest as a remedy for illicit distillation, the total prohibition of spirits; he thought public opinion would go with such a measure. He had heard it said in different parts of the colony, that if spirits were prohibited, they would gladly abandon them. Examined by Mr. COWPER: He had been

of his powers to his new position. There might then be equally good sense, in putting Mr. PLUNKETT on the Bench, to undergo similar training, in order that it might be attended in him, by equally desirable results. But this is not the object of the new appointment. The real object is, or ought to be, the public interest. At least, we are certain no one would have the hardthood openly to put forward any other. But we have shown that the public must always suffer from frequent and unnecessary changes of this kind. They suffer in ill-decided causes which require re-consideration; re-consideration involves additional expense; and, therefore, so far as suitors are concerned, nothing can justify the placing of Mr. PLUNKETT or Mr. Theraw in the office of Mr. Justice A BKCKETT, but the fact of the superiority of those gentlemen, in judician qualifications, to the gentlemen whose displacement is decreed by Downing after. As we have heard no suggestion of such superiority from the most partial, respect to the superiority of those gentlemen, in judiciant qualifications, to the gentlemen in judiciant distributions, the superiority for those gentlemen, in judiciant distributions, to the gentlemen whose displacement is decreed by Downing after. As we have heard no suggestion of such consideration and for further consideration, and for such purposed standard was to those gentlemen and the superiority from the most partial, the superiority from the most partial, the superiority from the most partial, the superiority from the most possesses when the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the superiority from the most partial may be a substitute of the

By Mr. BLAND : He did not attribute the By Mr. BLAND: He did not attribute the diminution of intemperance during the last few years to high duties, but to a better moral in-fluence that was exercised over them—the same influences might be exercised over the lower classes, if they could be reached; and this was the advantage of temperance societies, first simple persuasion to induce them to break off a habit, and then other moral influences to keen them from;

easy of detection, that illicit distillation must soon cease.

After some further questions had been put by various honorable members with reference to previous answers given, Mr. Saunders was permitted to withdraw.

The Rev. John M. Encroe, was next called in and examined by Mr. ROBINSON as follows: Was connected with St. Patrick's Total Abstinence Society. There were about 7600 teetotallers; many of these persons were of very intemperate habits before joining the society; a reduction in the price of spirits would probably increase the consumption. Should think that lowering the duties would have this effect; as there were many persons who would effect; as there were many persons who would ink more spirits if they could afford it. Was in America at the time of the temperance had been a great improvement in the habits of the lower classes of the colony, as well from the falling off in the price of labour. The natives of this colony were not naturally disposed to use ardent spirits so much as those of northern arigin, unless when influenced by the bad habits of parents and others, Should think that a tax upon tea and sugar would be regarded as a tax for the encouragement of drunkenness; should think that the great use of tea and sugar in this country had been a great auxiliary in the cause of temperance.

The Rev. Mr. Adam was next called and examined by the COLONIALSECRETARY as follows:—Was a member of the total abatinence society in this colony, and had been connected with similar societies for about ten years. It would be difficult to say what was the strength of the Teetotal Societies throughout the colony, there were many persons who occasionally seceded or signatures upon its roll; should think that temperance was on the increase; there were many branch societies throughout the colony; there were many persons who occasionally seceded or broke the pledge, but they might rejoin the society in these cases, when they thought fit to do so. Had observed that the amount of spirits taken from the bonded stores during the last three years had remained about the same, notwithstanding the increase of population; this was caused partly by the progress of temperance, and partly by amuggling and illicit distillation. Should fear that a reduction in the duties would increase drunkenness, as there were many persons whose habits were so depraved in this respect, that they already drank as much liquer as they could procure. Should think it better to prohibit the use of spirits altogether, if the revenue would admit of it. This better to prohibit the use of spirits altogether, if the revenue would admit of it. This better to prohibit the use of spirits altogether, an saries of life.

By Mr. HAMILTON: The state of Ame-By Mr. HAMILTON: The state of America, with regard to intoxication, was very bad before the temperance movement, and it was very difficult to get any law passed to check this evil, as it was looked upon as an infringement upon public liberty. A law of this kind was attempted in Penusylvania on one occasion, but had not been tried since.

By Mr. ROBINSON: But few of the sailors coming to this port attended the Seaman's Chapel, of which witness was the chaplain.

By Mr. BERRY: There was a duty upon imported spirits in America.

By Dr. LANG: The population of this colony was scarcely analogous to that of America. Was disposed to think that there was a greater amount of public opinion in favour of the prohibition of spirits altogether, than many had supposed; should not regard the prohibition in the light of a penal law: for the evils of intemperance were so great, that such a law was rather to be regarded as one for the protection of the community generally. Among a British population like that of this colony, the influence and stamp of authority would greatly tend to estion like that of this colony, the influence and stamp of authority would greatly tend to eatablish the principle of temperance, and carry out any legislative prohibition, which was not the case in a population like that of America. Should not regard a law which prevented a man from injuring and destroying himself as an interference with his personal liberty; should think that the proposed reduction of duties would lower the price to the consumer, and would increase drunkenness.

think that the proposed reduction of duties would lower the price to the consumer, and would increase drunkenness.

By Mr. Bl.AND: Alcohol had only been known during the last 800 years, and it was only during the last 800 years that spirits had got into general use. The ancients did not entertain so different an opinion as to the use of intoxicating liquors from the modern teetotalers as was supposed, for the ancient wines were, for the most part without alcohol. There had been erroneous opinions as to the propriety of using spirituous liquors, and many persons who had in some degree abandoned the use of them, might have been led to relapse by the injudicious prescriptions of medical men.

The witness then withdrew.

The COLONIAL SECRESARY now proposed that the House should resume, and that leave should be asked to sit again to-morrow (this day), for the further consideration of this Bill, remarking that he believed no objection could be made to such a course by honorable members who had motions upon the paper.

The House then resumed, and the CHAIR-MAN having reported progress, the necessary leave was granted.

It was erroneously stated in the report of Thurnday's proceedings that no barrister had arrived from Sydney. Mr. Broadhurst was in Court on that day, but he did not appear professionally. Mr. Carr was in Court to-day.

The Court was opened at nine o'clock. A was included for having, at Drayton, serve milles from Siglaton, on the 29th April, 1844, stolen a quantity of silver, a fowling-piece, &c., the property of John Kerrigan.

The Jury, without leaving the box, found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to be transported for fifteen years.

There being no further criminal business before the Court, His Honon discharged the Jury, with thanks for their attendance.

The remainder of the calendar was then gone through as follows:—

John M. Ireland, came tree, for cattle-stealing, discharged in his own recognizances in the sum of £46 to appear when called upon.

Norderent, an aboriginal native, for felony, discharged.

William Butler, ticket-of-leave, for horse stealing and destruction of property, remanded till next Circuit Court.

Robert White and Thomas Holt, free, for horse-stealing, remanded till next Circuit

Robert White and Thomas Holt, free, for horse-stealing, remanded till next Circuit Court.

All the other prisoners in gaol for trial are either to be tried at the Quarter Sessions, or the depositions in their respective cases had not been received by the Attorney-General.

There are two civil causes for trial: but the civil business having been fixed for Tuesday, next, the Court was adjourned till that time.

His Honos remained on the bench about an hour, while endeavours were being made by the learned counsel on either side of the first cause to commence proceedings at once (it being then only half-past eleven), Mr. BROAD-HURST at length announced that they could not be prepared before Tuesday, and the Court was adjourned accordingly.

Cross-examined by Mr. Chambers: Did not know anything of building, but he should say that according to the plans produced the house should have had four outside walls.

James Rampley had been employed as a carpenter upon the building in question, which was commenced in October, 1843, and finished about subtent more than are. Mr. Stark living penter upon the building in question, which was commenced in October, 1843, and finished about eighteen months ago; Mr. Stark living in it since the latter period. In witness's opinion the house was built according to the plans, and Mr. Stark had several times told him he was well pleased with it—both while the work was going on and since.

Cross-examined: The work he approved of was chiefly his own work, and he would never admit it was bad. According to the plans, there should be four outside walls to the house, and he thought there were; the joists of the upper floor ran parallel with the street, and the ends were inserted in the wall of the next house (formerly Mr. Foster's); there was no other wall on that side of Mr. Stark's house on which they could rest; the ends of the joists went half way through the wall of Mr. Foster's house, and he had heard the defendant request the plaintiff to fill up the holes, but he did not know whether it was done; the folding gates were not framed well, and they did not reach the top of the opening, but he did not know whether they should or not; the gates were eight feet high, not high enough for a loaded dray to pass through. The witness entered into various other particulars in which he thought the house defective.

Mr. Broadwurser objected; it was necessary to keep to the agreement, which did not specify height of gates, or any other details.

Mr. Chambers then called the attention of the Jury to the evidence of Mr. Keddie, whe certainly said that the defendant had told his that he was satisfied with the work, but the the was satisfied with the work, but the the was satisfied with the work, but the Jury would remember that that was only fortnight after he had occupied the house, and he had not found out its faults. It was gish that he had made the admission on the faith the contract, and not on actual experience of the house. He had a good opi ion of the plaintiff, and he thought that as a master of course he would build the house as it should be. If the evidence could show that the house had not been constructed as such a house should be, he submitted his client we entitled to a verdict. He then called John Jeffectt, builder, who had examined the house, and found it defective in various patientlars, which he associated; in his quint it would cost from £30 to £35 to finish the house as it should have been built.

By Mr. BROADHURST: He only examined the house the week before last, and the nod yunday; it was necessary for a person to see the house the week before last, and the nod yunday; it was necessary for a person to see he house the week before last, and the nod yunday; it was necessary for a person to see he house a hould be.

Sydney, 17th September, 1945.

After the protest had been read, a lengthened conversation took place as to whether it was presented in proper time to become part of the proceedings, and whether it was competent for those who had signed it to request that it might be forwarded to the Governor with the clause protested against, when it was finally agreed to receive it, and attach it to the proceedings; but, if any member had any thing to move further respecting it, that notice of motion must be given to that effect.

Mr. Firstan next presented a petition from upwards of fifty of the inhabitants of Lower George-street, praying that the kerbing in that part of the city be proceeded with. After the petition had been read, several members of the Improvement Committee stated that arrangements were in progress for getting the kerbing referred to proceeded with, when it was moved by Mr. Fisher, and seconded by Mr. Covle, that the petition just read be received; while Mr. Floon thought that it was unnecessary to discuss a subject which had been handed over to the Improvement Committee, and moved that the petition be rejected on that ground. A division took place when the amendment was carried by eight votes to five. The Maxon stated, that as there were not a sufficient number of members present to enable them to go into Committee, and as there was no business of pressing importance ready to go on with, he, with the consent of those present, adjourned the Conneil to three o'clock on Monday, the 19th instant.
